"Balloons are dependent on the atmosphere surrounding them.
They lack the ability to steer and cannot control the wind.
They can only ascend or decend to find the elevation that will push them in the direction they need to end.
Too high and you run out of air.
Too low and you meet the ground.
If you have a planned destination,
adjust your elevation that is right for where you're bound.
Sometimes you're up and, yes, sometimes you're down.
Just keep your focus on the course and make sure you're ready when it's time to meet the ground."
